Name of Book: The Two Daughters

Genre Folk Tale

In this story the plot is about this man who has two daughters they both were married. One day his wife wondered how her her daughters were doing, so she told her husband to go and see how they are doing. When he went to his first she was living in a small house just like him and she was very happy when he went back when asked by his wife how is she he said she is very happy and doing really well. Then when he was on his way to his second he could not find it because all the houses were very big then he asked somebody standing outside every big house and asked him that man said this is the house when he went inside everything was new and strange to him he did not think his daughter was feeling to good when she actually was he found that house to modern and could not even spend one night there .When asked by his wife the same question the in bad feeling he said she is not at all good and told her how they treated him.

The story and the characters were actually quite different and they how they acted and how it was written the way it was it was just very nice it was put in a very nice way.

I like this book because it has a nice moral to it and it teaches me about people's feelings and a lot about other things to.

Name of Book: A Seer of Lime

Genre: Folktale

The story is about a person who works at Akbar's courtyard. There's another person who wanted a job with Akbar. One day the person who worked at the courtyard came to the same shop to buy a seer of lime. The shopkeeper asked why? When he heard that the king had told him to do so, he advised him to take a tub of curd instead. When this worker went back to the King, he was commanded to drink it all up! The next day Akbar got a great shock seeing him alive! Akbar called the shopkeeper who had advised the worker there and then and asked him to join the court as he wanted clever people like him. When Akbar asked him his name, with great respect he bowed his head and said "Birbal, your majesty"!

The main characters of this story are Akbar, Birbal accompanied by the courtiers. The story revolved around Birbal's intelligence. Their expressions and actions shaped this lovely story.

I was hooked by this story because it tells us about history and I love history. Also it was a great idea to tell Birbal's name in the end and keep his identity a surprise.
