A Crumbling Syria Divides The World

Syria, a land full of so much promise and beauty has been turned into a battlefield; as it's fallen prey to the greed and evil of President Assad's Baathist party regime that will stop at nothing on it's quest to retain power. On the heels of the Arab Spring revolutions that started in December 2010, where rulers in Tunisia, Jordan, Libya and Egypt have been deposed through a mix of peaceful and violent protests by a disgruntled public, President Assad is desperately trying to hold on to his reigns; at any cost.

"President Assad's oppressive reign must end, we must save Syria from itself; while there is still something left to salvage."

His regime is responsible for killing thousands of civilians every day in Syria for the last 2 years; through the use of bombs, gunfire, and lately even through the use of chemical weapons which have been banned for decades. The death toll since the protests started stands at more than 100,000, and millions have fled to neighbouring countries. As the toll creeps up; the world once again find itself in a state a major conflict; there is a great division between the nations as to whether there should be international interference in Syria or not.

America and her allies, including Great Britain, France and Turkey, all support international interference, while countries like Russia and China oppose it. The situation in Syria is deteriorating by the day, since it is evident that peace is nowhere on the horizon, then what is stopping America from sending her troops in and starting a full-fledged war? History and experience leave America and her allies hesitant; as in 2003, under George W Bush II, the United States invaded Saddam Hussain's Iraq, under the (false?) claims that Iraq had Weapons of Mass Destruction. This was a very questionable war, as no WMDs were eventually found and by many accounts, the invasion has left Iraq worse off than before with the unrest continuing even today, similar to what happened earlier in Afghanistan.

Is Syria just the next country in this series, or is there more to it; what should be done? Given the history, can we really believe for certain that Syria has actually used chemical weapons, or is this another veil for the West to attack Syria? Whom should we trust this time? Even as the world debates, thousands of innocent Syrian civilians find themselves helpless and resigned to their terrible fate. They are witnessing their entire world crashing around them for no fault of their own. After 2 years of brutal manslaughter throughout the nation, the people's spirits lie crushed, and the entire nation has been turned into a bloody war zone. In such a tragic situation, something must be done; it is wrong for us to sit on the fence and watch what is going on, like we did in Serbia, Rwanda, etc. Of course there will be consequences for interfering but aren't these worth the price? One way or another, I feel that President Assad's oppressive reign must be brought to an end, we must save Syria from itself-while there is still something left to salvage.

Hello China!

This August, I had the opportunity to visit China and sing in the World Peace Choir, conducted by the Grammy award winner Gerald Wirth. China was:

Titanic – There were 30 of us; five Indians, four Estonians, five Australians, four Austrians, eleven Malaysians and one Peruvian. In 15 days, we travelled across rolling mountains, gliding rivers and monstrous buildings. China was titanic, gargantuan almost. We visited six different cities, and everywhere we looked, there was something different to see. In the countryside, the hills seemed endless. In the cities, it seemed the skyscrapers too had no zeniths.

Welcoming – Everyone in China was eager to see us perform. We were the World Peace Choir, and we'd stop and sing literally anywhere; in the Forbidden City, at children's schools, next to canals and in vast, booming concert halls. Everyone who watched us sing was welcoming; they were refreshed by how different we were. We were often stopped on the streets for pictures with pedestrians!

“I've always thought of music as a colossal part of me. Road tripping around China with different people, who had knowledge of music that far exceeded my own, only heightened my love for music.”

Bewildering – China never failed to confuse us. Along with the language, our biggest dilemma was that the food tasted nothing like the Indianised Chinese food we were used to. Our expectations were shattered by bewildering displays of peculiar food which comprised things like pigeon and ox tongue (the Chinese have no pity for the vegetarians). We were a large group of kids, each with a different palate, and satisfaction of the whole group was rare. Every once in a while though, we'd find something particularly delicious, and eat to our hearts' content. As for further bewilderment, the public toilets were something I'd rather not discuss.

Absolute – Everything functioned in an absolute, methodical manner. Performances were bang on time, everything was organized and no matter the occasion, punctuality was a must. The local choirs were always prepared and incredibly enthusiastic (they even gave us gifts!).

Enlightening – I've always thought of music as a colossal part of me. Road tripping around China with different people, who had knowledge of music that far exceeded my own, only heightened my love for music. I got a taste of what it's like to be a real musician, and was given the opportunity to make myself heard, through melodies.

Our choir's theme song, 'coming together to sing for a better future' symbolic of our trip; we spread love and showed unity. We made friends, learnt about each other, and were all enlightened. When we left China, we were teary eyed; wishing our trip could've lasted longer. Why must all good things come to an end?

Incredible India

India has been a very culturally rich country for more than 3000 years. Many years ago, a Chinese scholar Hieun Tsang came for knowledge to a university in Bihar called Nalanda. This led to the spread of Buddhism which spread to Indo - China, Japan, Mongolia and Central Asia from India. Alexander the Great wanted to rule India but his soldiers refused as they were afraid of the vast armies. The Greeks have called India "Indio" which means the people who live near the Indus, which the old Persians called it "Hindos".

Then, in 1498 a Portuguese sailor named Vasco Da Gama discovered India on a sea route. European companies then came here for trade. However, the British came to know that all the kings were fighting so they defeated the Europeans and the Indian kings and started the British Raj. They then ruled for 200 years until our independence in 1947.

Famous explorers like Marco Polo, Ibn- Batuta and Vasco Da Gama have come and written about the culture, people and lifestyle of Indians. There are a lot of things I like about India and it is its unity in diversity and acceptance of people from different races and languages that fascinates me the most. India is home to the largest gathering of tigers in the world and has various forms of wildlife present. India is also the world's largest exporter of banana and mangoes! And so, because of all these reasons, I am proud to be an Indian.

Good Girl Gone Bad?

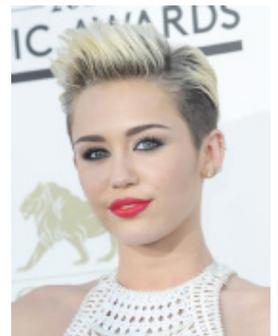

Miley Cyrus has successfully, and very brutally, killed Hannah Montana while becoming the talk of the VMAs. From an onstage costume change to an even more peculiar peach coloured two piece to the stunt with Robin Thicke, Miley Cyrus absolutely stole the show, but not necessarily in a good way. Miley Cyrus has transformed from the sweet and innocent little child star into a wild twerking sensation. She “twerked” her way onto the VMA stage but unfortunately out of many viewers’ hearts. According to Cyrus, “People just evolve, they change” and when people asked her what happened to the cute little girl that played Hannah Montana she simply replied, “She grew up, she’s transformed and is still changing,” and that’s exactly what she said she’s doing. She’s changing, she’s growing, she’s transforming into a new human being, and she has every right to do that. She’s no longer a naive little “Disney” girl but a young woman who is able to take care of herself and is able to take her own decisions. Miley Cyrus is changing and people have a problem with that change. What they don’t understand is people do change; they grow up and out of things. In this day and age people feel they have a right to know the intimate details of a celebrity’s life and celebrities have accepted that but people need to understand that every detail of their lives isn’t going to be pretty. Yes, celebrities should carry themselves in a positive manner as should the rest of the world, but we need to support them with their life decisions, like we do to our near and dear because they are what they are because of us and our support towards them.

“She’s changing, she’s growing, she’s transforming into a new human being, and she has every right to do that.”

Miley’s recent antics don’t essentially mean that her goals in life have changed, but perhaps her manner has. Any time people change, life feels uneasy because it’s a new place, an uncharted ground, a new adventure. She’s going through the same process that others go through, just on a different scale because she lives a see-through life of a celebrity. One thing that’s certain is that there is nothing wrong with change; there is no way for a person to grow unless they pass through change. The truth is we don’t have a choice about change; just on how we react to it. Whenever people are transitioning from one phase of life to another, they need time to re-evaluate their position and attitude towards life. The issue that stars, especially child stars like Miley Cyrus, have is that they have to have this transition in public while many of the others have the privilege of doing it in private.

Miley Cyrus is no longer Hannah Montana; she is a girl transitioning into young woman who is moving onto adulthood. Her only problem is she’s forced to do it on a public platform while the rest of the world watches in judgment. As long as Miley understands and accepts that she will have to pay the price for stardom and it isn’t going to be a smooth road she’ll be travelling, she’ll be fine. Miley has indeed become the talk of the VMAs and has no doubt lost some fans, her “Smilers” may drift away, but as she continues to transition she will definitely gain and regain fans as well as her popularity.

The Land Of The Thunder Dragon

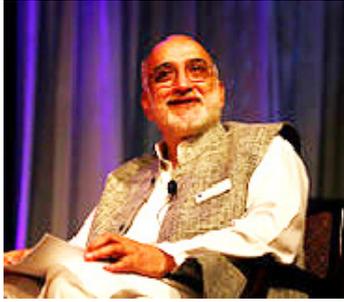

“In a world where yesterday’s exciting new destination quickly becomes today’s bland tourist trap, Bhutan continues to shine like a rare sparkling gem.” -Thujik Nadik

From the 1st to the 10th of August 2013, 19 students from class 8 of Vasant Valley School were given to opportunity to visit Bhutan; a small Himalayan country east of Nepal, nestled between China and India, with a population of around 700,000. Even as we entered Paro airport, the fresh scent in the air, as well as the scenic beauty of the place was striking, and gave us an alluring first impression. Bhutan’s desirability as a destination is largely based on the heartfelt hospitality of the people, the pristine and mythical landscape, the rich and vibrant culture and social and environmental beauty. Though our stay in Thimpu, Bhutan’s capital, passed by in the blink of an eye, we did so much in those 3 days. We visited the Druk School, observed their way of leaning and played a football match against the Bhutanese, which we lost. During our stay, we also visited Paro and Punakha, and resided in 3 extremely different yet homely hotels.

“Bhutan’s desirability is largely based on the heartfelt hospitality of the people, the vibrant culture and environmental beauty.”

The hotels, though beautifully decorated, had a domestic feel to them, due to the benevolence of the attendants who made us feel comfortable. I never felt homesick, and every time I walked into my room, I could feel a smile light up my face. I can truthfully say that Bhutan is one of those places which enjoy the fruit of democracy, yet surprisingly has retained its own cultural identity. We made friends we will never forget, and promised to stay in touch. As we flew through the air back to our own land, we reminisced about our memorable experience. Walking out of the IGI airport, I recalled every detail of this amazing trip, and knew that it will stay in my heart forever.

A Morning with Mr. Rajeev Mehrotra

Rajiv Mehrotra is an Indian writer, television producer-director and documentary film maker. He is best known as the former acclaimed host of one of India's longest running talk shows on public television, "In Conversation", on Doordarshan. He has authored half a dozen books on spirituality, most notably Conversations with The Dalai Lama.

Q. You attended both St. Stephens College and Oxford University. What are some of the lessons that you've drawn from your experiences at these institutions?

A. Well I was never very academically bright, but both of these institutions are flexible institutions that adapt to children with specific needs. They look at your talent and skills, not just marks. So I studied a little, but I did a lot of theatre as well. I was part of several different college societies.

Q. Off late, there is a mad rush among students to get the highest marks possible, what advice would you give these kids?

A. I don't believe marks determine anything. I never had the best marks, yet I always had great experiences. I've interacted with Baba Amte, His Holiness the Dalai Lama. I've announced on All India Radio. So many students today have a passion, but are thrust into mediocrity. I know so many bright kids who have been destroyed because they were pressure into taking Mathematics in Class 11 and 12. So there are systemic issues that stifle individual excellence.

Q. We know you manage the Dalai Lama Foundation, but you also spend a lot of time managing the Public Serving Broadcasting Trust. What exactly does the latter NGO do?

A. We concentrate on negotiating the independent space between commercial and state funded television. As part of this we have supported over 350 independent film makers. Commercial television is basically concerned with delivering audience to advertisers. It will never promote any value that is antithetical to what these advertisers are trying to perpetuate. For true democracy, we need democratization of the media.

Q. How important do you think media has become today?

A. The media's role is crucial. The media, along with education is a determinant of change. Media is part of your mental diet, it speaks to you subliminally, it tells you to be fair, and to be slim. It is up to you to counter this imprint in the deep recesses of your mind.

Top 5 Weirdest Restaurants

1. Modern Toilet- This small restaurant in Taiwan transports you to a world where you eat in a toilet. All seats are real toilets, and all tables are glass-covered sinks or bathtubs. Most important, however, is the food, which comes in plates and bowls shaped like miniature tubs, sinks, or, obviously, toilets.

There are little poo shaped buns and drinks served in urinals.

2. Opaque Restaurant- Customers are seated in a completely dark environment where it isn't even possible to see your own hand. They dine here and have to eat using just their senses of touch, smell and taste. Each burst of spice and each hint of sweetness yield an entirely new appreciation of fine cuisine.

3. A380- In Flight Kitchen- This unique restaurant in Taipei is an A380 flight themed restaurant. The décor is completely like a plane; the seats have seatbelts and there are no smoking signs. Occasionally there are also flight announcements.

4. Lainio Snow Village Ice Restaurant- Just north of the Arctic Circle the winters are cold enough to sustain Snow Village's Ice Restaurant for the season. Diners sit on solid ice chairs at solid ice tables. This restaurant is ice cold and kept that way at between 23 and 28 degrees Fahrenheit at all times.

5. Alcatraz E. R.- This weird restaurant in Tokyo allows one to experience life in prison for just one meal. Upon arrival diners are handcuffed and taken to their cells where they can order from a list of bizarre elixirs served in a blood transfusion apparatus.

जैसे ही गुरुवार को सुबह 8 बजकर 5 मिनट पर अग्नि 5 ने परीक्षण उड़ान भरी और करीब बीस मिनट के बाद इस मिसाइल ने अपने तय निशाने पर अचूक वार किया, वैसे ही भारत दुनियाभर से अग्नि 5 की सफलता पर प्रतिक्रियाएं आनी शुरू हो गईं। राष्ट्रपति, प्रधानमंत्री और रक्षा मंत्री ने रक्षा अनुसाधन एवं संगठन (डी आरडी ओ) के वैज्ञानिकों को अग्नि 5 के सफल परीक्षण के लिए बधाई दी। यह मिसाइल सबसे तेज़ मिसाइलों में से एक है। यह मिसाइल 5000 से लेकर 8000 किलोमिटर दूर तक वार कर सकती है। और 15 सप्टम्बर ही, अग्नि 5 ने अपनी दूसरी उड़ान भरी है। बहुत ही जल्द अग्नि 6 भी आने वाली है। कहा जा रहा है कि वह 8000 से 12000 किलोमिटर तक वार करेगी। भारत की इस सफलता पर अमरीका ने अपने जवाब में दिया कि भारत अपने पड़ोसी चीन के समकक्ष खड़ा हो गया है। इस विकास पर हर भारतीय को गर्व है।

No Man Is An Island

There was once a boy who walked all alone. He had made up his mind to leave his noisy home. He walked and walked with his heavy back pack, Until, he came upon a spooky abandoned shack. He decided to make this his permanent abode. He was glad that he was finally off the endless road. Peaceful days passed without any fuss or scandal. Soon, the boredom of daily chores was something he couldn't handle. He decided to call for help from his family. So glad they were to hear his voice that they came instantly. His family worked hard to clean up the mess, They stayed on a few days at the boy's repeated request. That day the boy realized his grave mistake. Living alone was something that he could no longer take. He learnt a lesson, which was now easy to understand, 'No man is an island', he spread this message across all land.

ताज़ यात्रा एक मधुर याद

शुक्रवार, 20 सितम्बर को मैं अपनी कक्षा के साथ आगरा, ताज़महल देखने गई थी। वहाँ जाने के लिए हमने ताज़ एक्सप्रेस वे का रास्ता चुना था। दोपहर में आगरा पहुँच कर हमने सबसे पहले आगरा फोर्ट देखा। शाम को हम कलाकृति देखने गए। कलाकृति में हमने सुन्दर सुन्दर नक्काशी देखी। हमें मकराना के बारे में भी बताया गया। उसके बाद हम नेचर वॉक के लिए गए। वहाँ से ताज़महल का नज़ारा तो लाज़वाब था। वहाँ हमने चिड़ियों की आवाज़ सुनी और एक झील भी देखी। दूसरे दिन हम ताज़महल देखने गए। वहाँ जब ताज़महल का विशाल दरवाज़ा देखा तब पता चला कि ताज़ कितना सुन्दर है। ताज़महल के अन्दर हमने शाहजहाँ और मुमताज़ महल की कब्रें देखीं। ताज़महल में वैसी ही नक्काशी देखी जैसी कलाकृति में थी। जब हम ताज़ से बाहर आए तो हमने नीम के पेड़ और तुलसी के पौधे भी देखे। मुझे ये ताज़ यात्रा सबसे अच्छी लगी।

It all started when one of Shah Jahan's wives, Mumtaz Mahal, died in Burhanpur while giving birth to their 14th son. When the first brick was laid for me, it was probably 1631. It took 22000 labourers and 22 years to build me. When Mumtaz Mahal died, she was buried in Burhanpur and her grave was brought to me after six months. Shah Jahan did not just use any odd material for me, he used pure white marble from Makrana in Rajasthan. A few years later Shah Jahan's son Aurangzeb imprisoned him in the Agra Fort, that was started by Akbar, his grandfather. He could see me from there. I wish I had been built by the first emperor, Babar - Shah Jahan's great grandfather for then each and every Mughal emperor would have seen me. You should see my reflection in the Yamuna, which is also steadily drying up. I sparkle like anything. Though I wish I survive forever, I am dependent on you. If you want me in the future, you better stop polluting the environment because my marble is becoming yellow and soon I may fall. Would you like that to happen??

A Shocking Truth

Hi! I am going to tell you a true story. It is about me, Nandani Agarwal. One day when I came back home from school I saw my grade sheet on my dad's table. My mom came and explained to me that my grades in academics were very good, but I had got extremely poor grades in Western Dance, Indian Dance and Physical Education. I was questioned. I said that was because I am not able to run or dance for long. My shin bone starts hurting, maybe my stamina is low. My mom said that if I worked hard I would achieve good results. Since that day I started playing squash and joined the basketball and athletics camp. I really worked hard and after a few months I realized I could exercise for long; my stamina had increased. Then, one fine Saturday I got ready for my squash class. My friend Nehmat Mann and I were running with others and suddenly my shin started aching. I couldn't control myself and just sat down. My coach came running to me and saw that my knee had swollen. So he got some ice and put it on my knee. My parents explained to me that the swelling is normal and it will go away in a day or two. My dad even said, "Nandani, no pain no gain!". I was happy to hear that. I was in a lot of pain so my dad tied a crepe bandage, massaged it with iodex and I went to sleep. I woke up at 2 am- howling! I had got a rash all over my right leg. The pain soon became unbearable. I couldn't walk. My mom gave me a pain killer and I slept with her. Next day we went to an Orthopaedic. He suspected a disease called Oshood Schlatters disease and got my x-ray done which confirmed it. He put me on a wheel chair with a knee brace and a crepe bandage. The most shocking news was when he said that I would not be able to any physical exercise or play sports for six months. I was devastated but my mom said that whatever god does there is a reason behind it. I think it was all said to console me. It had been a day of the most unexpected twists and turns. I crept into my bed as quiet as a mouse, pulled up the covers over my head and smiled into the darkness as I have faith in God.

The Dreaded Summatives

1. Make sure the never ending stock of food is around. Studying is exercise to your brain, and your brain needs the fuel. So make sure you're properly stocked before starting, to avoid over exhaustion of the brain. I would suggest an overflowing stock of chocolate as the most helpful.

2. Call up all your friends at regular intervals. Be sure to rub it in their faces if you're ahead of them. And even if you aren't, open up the textbook sneakily and read it out. Make yourself sound smart- you need the extra boost of confidence! And by doing this, you're down grading your friend and in turn motivating them to study hard too! How selfless you are.

3. Always use highlighters. They help you study (I think) and most importantly, they're colourful! If you don't have any at home, be sure to make a trip to any stationary shop and buy all the highlighters you can see. Don't tell your parents.

4. Go on every social networking site you know. Instagram pictures of all your books and papers. Tell the world how you have been studying FOREVER- Show off a little. Buy the extra-large nerdy glasses and put them on while studying. It will make you feel smarter. Don't feel shy to Instagram pictures of you wearing the glasses too!

5. If you're the type that just wants to impress the parents – make sure to go up to them frequently and recite out the one thing you learnt up the best. Trick them into believing you know everything, so that even when you fail, they'll still believe that you did your best. (Which you didn't, actually)

P.S. - It's the first time I'm giving the test too, so I actually have no idea.

A Day In The City Of Joy

It's 10am in the morning and the shutters of shops are just going up as people welcome the morning with yawns. Blue and white houses pass by as I drive down from the Kolkata airport. When the rest of the country is bustling with activity, this city has just woken up.

I'd always heard how laid back people here were but there is a strange comfort in this. At least someone somewhere is taking it easy and not rushing with the flow of time. There is this quaintness to the city, this old charm which makes it so unique. As soon as you step into the city, the disparity is glaring; it hits you in the face. Though it's prevalent in most parts of the country what makes it different here is that the smile on the faces of people never ceases to exist. I feel an overwhelming sense of hope and encouragement, that no matter the circumstances, it is you who ultimately has the choice to be happy.

"Leave your inhibitions behind, don't let its initial facade fool you; feel it, love it."

I reach my brother's house and he immediately takes me out to explore the city. I roam around on Park Street, visit some malls here and there, eat authentic Kolkata momos from the inner sanctums of Elgin Road and just walk along the roads, watching black and yellow ambassador taxis go past me, smiling to myself because in that moment, I swear I feel... different. Before I came here, I wasn't expecting anything much from Kolkata, but it grows on you. Exactly like a song. Leave your inhibitions behind, don't be overly judgmental or critical and don't let its initial facade fool you. Be there, feel it and love it. It's nothing like you would have ever experience before and that is what makes it so special. Breathe in a bit of Kolkata!
